

Danielle Russella

Danielle Russella is a 25+ year healthcare veteran with deep domain experience in commercial and government markets, client portfolio growth, business transformation, and creating high-performing client facing teams. She's built several companies from the ground up with a focus on global sales and enterprise distribution, strategic partnerships, joint ventures, and all facets of go-to-market. Danielle led several companies through extraordinary growth, was a founding Board Director of the National Telehealth Provider Network, and had extensive roles in several companies that went public, including Amwell's recent IPO (NYSE:AMWL).

Today Danielle is a Venture Chair at Redesign Health where she lends her expertise to Redesign Operating Companies. In this role she works with companies from their earliest days when the business is only an idea, spearheads hiring founding teams, and partners alongside founding CEOs to develop, build, publicly launch and scale their businesses.

Most recently, Danielle was with national telehealth leader Amwell. She joined the company at its inception in 2007, helping Amwell enter and lead in multiple markets. She held a number of executive roles including President of Strategic Partnerships, as well as President for the company's segment-focused Payer, Health System and Employer business units. Prior to Amwell, Danielle held leadership positions at several healthcare and technology companies including MEDdecision, Hewlett-Packard, and Bluestone Software, with earlier days spent as an investment banker at Wells Fargo.

Danielle received her B.S. in Finance from Drexel University and holds Series 7 & 63 Broker Licenses. Danielle serves on the Board of Navigating Cancer and is a sought-after speaker on topics ranging from technology as an enabler to new models of care delivery. She is heavily involved in several student/young adult mentor programs as well as local and national DE&I initiatives.
